Section 01

Where you are now

Can you move as fast as your business is changing?

You asked yourself that question at the start of the season. The pace of change has not slowed since. What has changed is how much practice you now have: decisions in Arena scenarios and drills, one chosen behavior applied in real work, a 90-Day Way that kept your actions visible, and a season of coaching your Athleader through the same reps. This guide helps you read what that practice shows, and decide what you carry forward.

YOUR NORTH STAR

Can I access my best decision-making and leadership as conditions change and pressure increases?

You were told you would revisit this question at the end of the experience. Now is the time.

Before you read

Your Benchmark scores are in the email you received after your first survey. Your Breakthrough scores appeared on the last page of this survey. Put the two side by side before you read on.

If you no longer have the email, use your answer to the final rating question in the survey, which asked whether you now lead the way you intend to when things change, when the path is unclear, or when the pressure is on, more or less often than at the start. This guide refers to it as your season question.

Your scores

Type your scores into the boxes, work out the change, and mark the level each one falls in now. Or print this page and write them by hand.

Your score is still not your identity

Every leader develops patterns. Some rely on instinct. Others on discipline, experience, or the ability to respond quickly. A season of practice does not replace those patterns. It gives you more to draw on when the old pattern is not enough.

Your Breakthrough score is not a verdict on the season. It is a signal of what held, what moved, and where your next opportunity to grow begins. Success is not perfection. Growth stays a priority when you keep showing up, practice deliberately, notice your response, and adjust. Progress is what matters, and the season is where it started, not where it ends.

Section 02

How to read your scores

Your Leadership Conditioning Index

Your Leadership Conditioning Index (LCI) summarizes selected behaviors measured in your assessment. It brings together your foundation (M.V.P.), your conditioning (the Core 4), and your leadership in action (Application). A higher score means you reported using those behaviors more consistently in relevant situations. It does not measure your overall leadership ability or predict business results.

Your LCI gives you one view of where the season landed. Your six scores show what sits behind it and where you can act. Section 07 uses those scores, and how they changed since your Benchmark, to help you choose what to carry forward.

Your six scores

SCORE	WHAT IT COVERS
M.V.P.	Your mission, vision and purpose, and your organization's values in action
Agility	Adapting when the plan changes (selected self-reported behaviors)
Resilience	Recovering and re-engaging after setbacks (selected self-reported behaviors)
Alignment	Clarifying priorities and aligning with others (selected self-reported behaviors)
Wellbeing	Sustaining focus and capacity to perform (selected self-reported behaviors)
Application	Carrying your leadership into real work, including under change, pressure and uncertainty

How a score is built

Each answer is converted to points: Almost always 100, Usually 75, Sometimes 50, Rarely 25, Never 0. On the M.V.P. questions, "I don't have one written" and "I'm not clear on my purpose yet" count as 0. Each score is the average of the questions in that area. Your answers reflect the past two weeks. Your Benchmark scores were built the same way, so the two can be compared.

What your score range means

Build the Foundation
Below 50

BE AWARE. BUILD THE REP.

You reported these behaviors less often. Notice when they are needed and practice one deliberate response.

Strengthen the Core
50 to 74

BUILD CONSISTENCY. EXPAND CAPACITY.

You reported these behaviors in some situations. Practice making one response more dependable.

Play at the Next Level
75 and above

RAISE THE DEMAND. ELEVATE OTHERS.

You reported these behaviors often. Practice sustaining them under greater demands and supporting others.

These levels describe reported consistency, not fixed labels or stages of personal worth. They are invitations to practice, not diagnoses or proof of performance under pressure. The same ranges apply to the LCI and all six scores, at Benchmark and at Breakthrough.

Reading your change

Compare each Breakthrough score with its Benchmark score. A shift of about 10 points, or a move into a different range, is worth noticing. Anything smaller can come from one answer on one question, so treat it as about the same.

YOUR CHANGE	WHAT IT MAY MEAN	WHAT TO DO
Moved up a range	You reported the behavior more consistently in the situations that call for it. The rep took hold.	Protect it. Give it harder moments.
Rose within the same range	The behavior is becoming more dependable, even if the level name has not changed.	Keep the rep going. Consistency is the gain.
About the same	The behavior held, or the situations that test it did not come up in the past two weeks.	Check whether it was tested. If not, choose a situation and practice.
Went down	You may have met harder conditions, or you may now judge your own response more strictly, which often happens after a season of practice. Both are information.	Look at the situations behind it before assuming it got worse. Section 07 helps.

These are self-reported changes over two weeks at each end of the season. They show how your reported consistency moved. They do not prove what caused the change, and they do not prove business results.

Section 03 YOUR FOUNDATION

Your M.V.P. foundation

This is the foundation part of your LCI. Your Mission, Vision and Purpose (M.V.P.) help you make choices that reflect what matters most, especially when good priorities compete. Values become visible through decisions, not simply statements. Your M.V.P. score reflects both the use of your anchors and your organization's values in action. Over the season, the question moved from whether your anchors are written to whether you used them when priorities competed.

Build the Foundation
Below 50

If an anchor is still not written, write it now. Then practice using it in one decision each week until it becomes the first thing you check.

Strengthen the Core
50 to 74

Your anchors show up in some decisions. Make them visible in the hardest ones: the trade-offs where two good priorities compete.

Play at the Next Level
75 and above

You lead from your anchors often. Share them with the people you lead so they can see what guides your choices, and help them define their own.

CARRY IT FORWARD

Choose one recurring decision over the next 90 days and ask each time: "What would my M.V.P. have me do here?" Afterward, note whether your behavior matched the value you named.

Section 04 YOUR CONDITIONING

Your Core 4™ conditioning

Your Core 4 scores summarize how often you reported selected behaviors over the past two weeks. Compare each with its Benchmark score. The capabilities named below are what you practiced in the Arena; the scores do not grade individual capabilities. Use each score and its change as a signal, then choose what to keep practicing in real work.

AGILITY Adapt Through Change

Condition cognitive flexibility, emotional agility under stress and decision-making in ambiguity. Adapt your thinking, regulate your response and choose a useful action when conditions shift.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Changes may still trigger a rushed reaction or a stall. Keep the rep you started: pause, consider another perspective and choose one next decision without waiting for certainty.	You adapt in more situations. Make it hold when the information is thinnest and the stakes are highest.	You keep moving through change. Extend it: help others think flexibly and move forward when the plan shifts.

CARRY IT FORWARD

Over the next 90 days, each time a plan changes, name one assumption to reconsider and make one timely decision with the information you have. Keep a note of what you did differently.

RESILIENCE Champion Under Pressure

Condition recovery capacity, emotional bounce-back and adaptive learning from adversity. A setback becomes insight you can use when you reset, learn and re-engage.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Setbacks may still cost you momentum. Keep the reset short and repeatable: notice the emotion, identify one lesson, re-engage.	Your recovery is more reliable. Make it hold through prolonged pressure, not only single setbacks.	You recover and re-engage often. Model it: show others how a setback becomes a lesson and a next step.

CARRY IT FORWARD

After each setback over the next 90 days, choose a reset and ask: “What did this teach me, and what will I do next?” Put the insight into action within the week.

ALIGNMENT Purpose-Driven Performance

Condition goal clarity and prioritization, communication alignment and collaboration agility. Know what matters most, make it clear to others and adjust together when priorities compete.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Your priorities may still not be visible to the people who rely on you. Keep the rep: one clear priority, one confirmed next action.	You create clarity in more situations. Make it hold sooner, when goals compete and perspectives differ.	You align people often. Extend it across boundaries, where purpose and coordinated action are hardest to keep clear.

CARRY IT FORWARD

Each week over the next 90 days, name the most important outcome, communicate one clear priority and invite a colleague's perspective. Confirm the next action and who owns it.

WELLBEING Sustainable Energy Performance

Condition physical readiness, emotional recovery and reset, and behavioral boundaries and focus. Manage your energy and attention so you can sustain performance when demands rise.

Build the Foundation Below 50	Strengthen the Core 50 to 74	Play at the Next Level 75 and above
Energy and focus may still slip before you notice. Keep the rep: one reset and one boundary that protects focus.	Your resets and boundaries are more repeatable. Make them hold in the demanding weeks, before energy is depleted.	You sustain energy and focus often. Model the boundaries and recovery practices that let others perform too.

CARRY IT FORWARD

Over the next 90 days, keep one boundary that protects your most important decisions, and notice the first signal that your energy or focus is slipping.

Your leadership in action

APPLICATION

Carry it into real work

This is the part of your LCI that shows whether your leadership holds up in real work. Your Application score summarizes self-reported behaviors in real work, including decisions, working with your manager and team, and responding when conditions change or information is incomplete. It is not a direct observation of your performance. Compared with your Benchmark, it shows whether what you practiced carried into the moments that count.

Build the Foundation
Below 50

Your best leadership may still be harder to reach when pressure or uncertainty rises. Keep practicing the rep in those moments, not only on calm days.

Strengthen the Core
50 to 74

Your leadership carries into real work in more situations. Make it dependable across changing conditions and difficult decisions.

Play at the Next Level
75 and above

Your leadership holds up in real work often. Extend it into higher-stakes situations and help others perform under pressure.

CARRY IT FORWARD

When conditions change or pressure rises over the next 90 days, ask yourself the North Star question. Make one decision using what you know, then identify the behavior someone could observe in your response.

Your North Star questions

Three Application questions address your North Star directly: thinking clearly when direction changes, using your best judgment under pressure, and seeing a way forward without all the answers. You answered them at the start of the season and again now. Your season question asked the same thing in one line. Read that answer alongside your Application score. Together they are your clearest view of whether practice transferred.

Section 06

From practice to performance

1	2	3	4	5
KNOW IT →	ACCESS IT →	DO IT CONSISTENTLY →	HOLD IT UNDER PRESSURE →	TRANSFER TO PERFORMANCE

The Arena is complete. The scenarios and drills gave you repetitions; your 90-Day Way carried a chosen behavior into real work. From here, holding it under pressure and transferring it to performance depends on what you keep practicing. Ask your Athleader, a peer or your own manager to keep observing your response, give specific feedback and help you practice again.

Each source offers a different view: your Benchmark and Breakthrough assessments capture self-reported frequency at the start and end of the season; drills gave you opportunities to practice; your 90-Day Way records real-work actions; and feedback from your Athleader, a peer or your own manager may add observations. None alone proves a change in business results. Together, they help you reflect on progress.

Progress is not a perfect rep or a higher number alone. Look for specific changes in what you do: a timely decision, a reset after a setback, a clearer commitment, or a boundary you actually keep. The season gave you reps. The next 90 days decide whether they hold.

Section 07

Choose what you carry forward

Choose one behavior to keep practicing and one to begin or strengthen over the next 90 days. Use your scores, and how they changed, to guide the choice. Then keep growth a priority through deliberate practice, feedback and visible action. What matters is how you respond once the season's structure is gone.

1. Protect your biggest gain. Find the Core 4 score that moved up the most since your Benchmark. That rep took hold. Keep it: name the situations where you will use it over the next 90 days, so it does not fade once the Arena ends. If nothing moved, go to step 2.

2. Find your next conditioning opportunity. Look at your four Core 4 scores now. Your lowest is still a potential area for more consistent practice. Its level in Section 04 gives you a starting focus; its Carry It Forward gives you an action. If two are tied or within 10 points, choose the one most likely to be tested in the next 90 days. If your M.V.P. score is below 50, or an anchor is still not written, add the M.V.P. action from Section 03.

3. Read a drop before you act on it. If a score went down, look at the past two weeks before assuming the behavior got worse. Were the conditions harder? Do you now judge yourself more strictly because you know what the behavior looks like? If either is true, keep the rep and give it more moments. If neither is, treat that area as your opportunity.

4. Check whether practice carried into real work. Compare Application with your four Core 4 scores, and with its own Benchmark. If Application rose, what you practiced is showing up where it counts. If it is still lower than all four, practice your chosen rep especially when change, pressure or uncertainty rises. This is a prompt for reflection, not proof of a transfer gap.

5. Use your strengths. Bring others into your growth. Your highest Core 4 score is a behavior you report using often. Draw on it to support the one you are still building. Tell your Athleader, a peer or your own manager what you will keep practicing and in which situations. Ask them to notice a specific action, share feedback, and help you decide what to repeat or adjust. Their view matters more now that the Arena's structure is gone.

If all four Core 4 scores are 75 or above

Choose a strength to test under greater demands: higher stakes, less certainty or more people depending on the outcome. Playing at the next level means continuing to grow, not assuming you have arrived. Consider helping someone else build the rep you have.

Keep showing up. Measure progress.

You will not get every rep right after the season any more than during it. Notice what happened, learn from it and practice again. Over the next 90 days, look for progress in your decisions, recovery after setbacks, clarity with others or the boundaries you keep. Keep that evidence in your 90-Day Way. Success is not perfection; it is more consistent behavior in the moments that matter.

Player-Coach

Coach what you are building

The strongest way to hold a rep is to coach it. Your Athleader has a Breakthrough of their own, and you spent the season building the same Core 4 together.

Bring your Breakthrough focus into your check-ins: name the behavior you are keeping, show what it looks like when pressure rises, and ask what your Athleader sees. Then use it in the Championship Conversation. Celebrate what your Athleader built, provide visibility so the people above you see it too, and plan the next season together, with your own next rep on the table beside theirs.

When you coach what you are building, you practice it twice: once in your own work, and once in how you lead someone else.

Section 08

Your closing reflection

In the survey, you named the most important behavior change you made this season, and one behavior you commit to sustaining over the next 90 days. Keep both in view. The first shows what practice can do. The second is where it continues.

The most important behavior change I made this season:

One behavior I commit to sustaining over the next 90 days:

The goal was never to finish the season. It is to build a response you can access more consistently when the moment comes, long after the Arena. Return to your North Star, use your 90-Day Way to notice your actions, and keep practicing. Your progress stays visible in what you do.

Built From Within. Conditioned to Win.
